... PREFACE...

In presenting to readers Lincoln's stories, there is a feeling of satisfaction that they will be well received. No man has lived, in the history of this country, who holds a more sacred place in the minds of the people than Honest Abe Lincoln, as he was familiarly known. His steadfastness of purpose, clear discernment, and equity of judgment peculiarly fitted him for the high position of Chief Executive of this nation at a time when the seeds of disunionism were being scattered broadcast throughout the land.

Abraham Lincoln had a marked penchant for story telling. There is hardly an instance in even the most serious of his interviews, that the familiar phrase "That reminds me of a story," was not introduced. In collecting these memoirs of Lincoln we are indebted to the press, to friends and to Barretts McClure's "Anecdotes of Abraham Lincoln."

CHARACTERISTICS OF MR. LINCOLN.

Secretary Usher, a member of Lincoln's Cabinet, and an old riend of his, gives the following interesting information:

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

In person, was tall and rugged with little semblance to any hispric portrait, unless he might seem, in one respect, to justify the which was given to an early English monarch. His countenance had even more of a rugged strength than his person. Perhaps the quality which struck the most, at first sight, was us simplicity of manners and conversation without form or cerenony of any kind, beyond that among neighbors. His hand writing had the same simplicity. It was as clear as that of Nashington, but less florid. He was naturally humane, inclined to pardon, and never remembering the hard things said against him. He was always good to the poor, and in his dealings with them was full of those "kind little words which are of the same blood as great and holy deeds." Such a character awakened instinctively the sympathy of the people. They saw his fellowfeeling with them, and felt the kinship. With him as President, the idea of republican institutions, where no place is too high for the humblest, was perpetually manifest, so that his simple presence was like a proclamation of the equality of all men. While social in nature, and enjoying the flow of conversation he was often singularly reticent. Modesty was natural to such character. As he was without effection, so he was without pretence or jealousy. No person, civil or military, can complain that he appropriated to himself any honor that belonged to another. To each and all he anxiously gave the credit that was due. His humor has also become a proverb. He insisted, sometimes, that he had no invention, but only a memory. He did not forget the good things that he heard, and was never without a familiar story to illustrate his meaning. At times his illustrations had a homely felicity, argument, which he always enforced with a certain intensity of manner and voice. He was original in mind as in character. His style was his own, formed on no model and springing directly from himself. While failing, often, in correctness, it is sometimes unique in beauty and in sentiment. There are passages which will live always. It is not exaggeration to say that, in weight and pith, suffuse in a certain poetical color, they call to mind Bacon's Essays. Such passages make an epoch in state papers. No Presidential message or speech from a throne ever had anything of such touching reality. They are harbinbers of the great era of humanity. While uttered from the heights of power, they reveal a simple, unaffected trust in Almighty God, and speak to the people as equal to equal.

There was one theme in which latterly he was disposed to conduct the public mind. It was in the treatment of the rebel leaders. His policy was never announced, and, of course, it would always have been subject to modification, in the light of experience. But it is well known that, at the very moment of his assassination, he was much occupied by thoughts of lenity and pardon. He was never harsh, even in speaking of Jefferson Davis, and only a few days before his end, when one who was privileged to speak to him in that way said: "Do not allow him to escape the law—he must be hanged," the President replied calmly in the words which he adopted in his last inaugural address, "Judge not, that ye be not judged." And when pressed again and again by the remark that the sight of Libby Prison made it impossible to pardon him, the President repeated twice over these same words, revealing unmistakably the generous

A ROMANTIC INCIDENT OF LIN-COLN'S EARLY LAW PRACTICE.

Having chosen the law as his future calling, he devoted himself assiduously to its mastery, contening at every step with adverse fortune. During this period of study, he for some time found a home under the hospitable roof of one Armstrong, a farmer who lived in a log house, some eight miles from the village of Petersburg, in Menard county. Here young Lincoln would master his lessons by the fire light of the cabin, and then walk to town for the purpose of recitation. This man Armstrong was himself poor, but he saw the genius struggling in the young student, and opened to him his rough home and bid him welcome to his coarse fare. How Lincoln graduated, with promise how he more than fulfilled that promise-how honorably he acquitted himself, alike on the battlefield, in defending our border settlements against the ravages of savage foes, and in the halls of our national legislature, are matters of history. But one little incident of a more private nature, standing as it does as a sort of sequel to some things already alluded to, I deem worthy of record. Some few years since the oldest son of Mr. Lincoln's old friend Armstrong, the chief support of his widowed mother-the good old man having some time previously passed from earth-was arrested on the charge of muider. A young man had been killed during a rioutous melee in the night time, at a camp meeting, and one of his associates stated that the death wound was inflicted by young Armstrong. A preliminary examination was gone into, at which the accuser testified so positively that there seemed no doubt of the guilt of the prisoner, and therefore he was held for trial. As it is too often the case, the bloody act caused an undue degree of excitement in the public mind. Every improper incident in the life of the prisoner, each act which bore the least semblance of rowdyism, each school boy quarrel, was suddenly remembered and magnified, until they pictured him as a fiend of the most horrid hue. As these rumors spread abroad, they were received as gospel, and a feverish desire for vengeance seized upon the infuriated populace, while only prison bars prevented a horrible death at the hands of a mob. The events were heralded in the newspapers, painted in the highest colors, accompanied by rejoicing over the certainty of punishment being meted out to the guilty party. The prisoner, overwhelmed by the circumstances in which he found himself placed, fell into a melancholy condition, bordering upon despair; and the widowed mother, looking through her tears, saw ro cause for hope from earthly aid.

At this juncture, the widow received a letter from Mr. Lincoln, volunteering his services in an effort to save the youth from the impending stroke. Gladly was his aid accepted, although it seemed impossible for even his sagacity to prevail in such a desperate case; but the heart of the attorney was in his work anhe set about it with a will that knew no such word as fail Feeling that the poisoned condition of the public mind was su! as to preclude the possibility of impaneling an impartial jury in the court having jurisdiction, he procured a change of venue and a postponement of the trial. He then went studiously to work unraveling the history of the case, and satisfied himself that his client was the victim of malice, and that the statements of the accuser were a tissue of falsehoods. When the trial was called the prisoner, pale and emaciated, with hopelessness written on every feature, and accompanied by his half-hoping, half-despairing mother, whose only hope was in a mother's belief of her son' innocence, in the justice of God she worshiped, and in the nobic counsel, who, without hope of fee, or reward upon earth, had un dertaken the cause, took his seat in the prisoner's box, and with a "stony firmness," listened to the reading of the indictment.

Lincoln sat quietly by, while the large auditory looked on him as though wondering what he could say in defense of one whose guilt they regarded as certain. The examination of the witnesses for the state was begun, and a well arranged mass of evidence, circumstantial and positive, was introduced, which seemed to impale the prisoner beyond the possibility of extrication, The counsel for the defense propounded but few questions, and those of a character which excited no uneasiness on the part of the prosecutor - merely, in most cases, requiring the witness to be definite as to time and place. When the evidence of the prosecution was ended, Lincoln introduced a few witnesses to remove some erroneous in:pressions in regard to the previous character of his client, who, though somewhat rowdyish, had never been known to commit a vicious act; and to show that a greater ill feeling existed between the accuser and the accused than the accused and the deceased. The prosecutor felt that the case was t clear one and his opening speech was brief and formal. Lincoln arose, while a deathly silence pervaded the vast audience, and in a clear but moderate tone began his argument. Slowly and carefully he reviewed the testimony, pointing out the hitherto unobserved discrepancies in the statements of the principal witness. That which seemed plain and plausible, he made to appear crooked as a scrpent's path. The witness had stated that the affair took place at a certain hour in evening, and that, by the aid of the brightly shining moon, he saw the prisoner inflict the death blow with a slung-shot.

Mr. Lincoln showed that at the hour referred to, the moon had not yet appeared above the horizon, and conseque by the whole tale was a fabrication. An almost instantaneous change seemed to have been wrought in the minds of his auditors, and the verdict of "not guilty" was at the end of every tongue. But the advocate was not content with this intellectual achievement. His whole being had for months been bound up in this work of gratitude and mercy, and, as the lava of the overcharged crater bursts from its imprisonment, so great thoughts and burning words leaped forth from the soul of the eloquent Lincoln. He drew a picture of the perjurer, so horrid and ghastly that the accuser could sit under it no longer, but reeled and staggered from the court room, while the audience fancied they could see the hrand upon his brow. Then in words of thrilling pathos, Lincoln appealed to the jurors, as fathers of sons who might become fatherless, and as husbands of wives who might be widowed, yield to no previous impressions, no ill-founded prejudice, but do his client justice; and as he alluded to the debt of gratitu which he owed the boy's sire, tears were seen to fall from meyes unused to weep. It was near night when he concluded saying, that if justice was done, as he believed it would be, beft the sun should set, it would shine upon his client as a free man.

The jury retired, and the court adjourned for the day. H an hour had not elapsed, when officers of the court volunteer the announcement that the jury had returned to their seats. repaired immediately to the court room and while the prison was being brought from the jail, the court room was filled overflowing with the citizens of the town. When the prison and his mother entered, silence reigned as completely as thou the house was empty. The foreman of the jury, in answer the usual inquiry from the court, delivered the verdict of "N Guilty." The widow dropped into the arms of her son, who lift her up, and told her to look upon him as before, free and in cent. Then, with the words, "where is Mr. Lincoln?" he rush across the room and grasped the hand of his deliverer, while heart was too full for utterance. Lincoln turned his eyes tows the west, where the sun still lingered in view, and then turni to the youth, said: "It is not yet sundown, and you are free." confess that my cheeks were not wholly unwet by tears, and turned from the affecting scene. As I cast a glance behind. saw Abraham Lincoln obeying the divine injunction by comforti the widow and the fatherless.

AS A LAWYER.

Lincoln belonged to the reasoning class of men. He dealt withis own mind and turned things over there, seeking the tru until he established it and it became a conviction. As a lawy he never claimed everything for his client. He stated something ed, t of both sides of the case. I have known him to say: "Now, I don't think my client is entitled to the whole of what he claims. ut t In this point or that point he may have been in error. He must itud rebate something of his claim." He was also very careful about giving personal offense, and if he had something severe to say, he would turn to his opponent or to the person about to be referred to and say: "I don't like to use this language,' or, 'I am sorry that I have to be hard on that gentleman;" and therefore, what he did say was thrice as effective, and very seldom wounded the person attacked. Throughout Mr. Lincoln's life that kind of wisdom attended him, and made him the great and skillful politician he was in handling people. He had a smooth, manly, pleasing voice, and when arguing in court, that voice attracted the jury, and did not tire them, so that they followed his argument throughout He was not a graceful man. He would lean on the back of a chair, or put the chair behind him, or stand hipshotten, or with arms akimbo, but yet there was a pleasure in "stening to him, because he seemed to unmercenary,

"I do not think Lincoln was ambitious at all. It seems to me that his object in life was no greater than to make a living for his family. The dream of avarice never crossed him. He took no initial steps to reach the Presidency or the Senate, and was rather pushed forward, than a volunteer. I can't recall in those days when he attended court that he ever spoke about himself or took any satisfaction in victory over an adversary, or repeated any good thing he had done or said. As a partisan he always reasoned for the good of the party, and not concerning his own advancement. Consequently, when the people had made up their minds that there was talent in him, of a remarkable kind, they came to his assistance with a spontaneity and vehemence that was electrical. He reaped the great reward of unselfishness as few men have ever done.

ABRAHAM AND THE LADIES.

"He was almost wholly possessed with a sense of duty an responsibility. He was not shy in the company of ladies, but don't think he thought anything about them until they came before him as guests and callers. Some of the women gave him a good deal of trouble. Some of his wife's people were Southern ers, and public attacks were made on them; as for instance, it was said that one of them had gone through the lines with a pass from Mr. Lincoln, and taken a quantity of medicine, etc. I remember that an old partner in law of mine brought his wife to Washington, and they wanted to see Mr. Lincoln. There was a great crowd awaiting around his door, but the door-keeper admitted us at once, and Mr. Lincoln came forward with both hands extended and shook the lady's hand, rather divining that she was the wife of my partner. He told a little anecdote or two, and said some quaint things, and when the lady came out she said to me: 'Why, I don't think that he is an ugly man at all.' He was almost a father to his wife. He seemed to be possessed of the notion that she was under his protection, and that he must look out for her like a willful child.

> 0-0-0-0-0-0 HIS NATURE.

"I can recall a certain incident that illustrates Lincoln's nature. Somewhere near the town of Paris there was a Whig population with strong prejudices in favor of protecting slavery. These people liked Lincoln and believed in him, and saw with pain that he was becoming a Radical. They came to him during court and said: 'We want you to come up and talk to us. We don't want to quarrel with you, and will hear all you have to say; but some thing must be wrong when as fair a man as you is drifting over to Abolitionism.' 'Very well,' said Mr. Lincoln, 'I will come up such a day and give you my views.' Lincoln went on that day, and made a temperate, sweet-toothed, cordial address on the issues of the day. He said: 'My friends, I perceive you will not agree with me, but that ought to make no difference in our relations with each other. You hear me, as you always have, with kindress, and I shall respect your views, as I hope you will mine.' They heard Lincoln through, and dismissed him with respect, but did not agree with him. There was another person up there by the name of Stephens, who was lame, and he undertook to emphasize Lincoln's views, and put his foot in it. A certain doctor, of Southern origin, interrupted Stephens, and said he would thrash him. Stephens turned around and replied, 'Well, doctor, you can thrash me, or do anything of a violent sort to me, if you don't give me any of your pills.' Lincoln used to tell this with a good deal of delight. You see, in those days the settlers in Illinois would live in the edges of the timber, which grew in spots and patches, and left naked prairie between the groves. It was at such a place that Lincoln made that speech on the slavery question.

LINCOLN'S TEMPER.

"I remember one event showing Lincoln's temper. He had issued a proclamation stating that when one-tenth of the voters of a Congressional district, or a part of a state, resumed their position in the Union, and elected a member of Congress, they should be recognized as much as the whole constituency. Chase remarked: 'Instead of saying voters, I suggest that you put in citizens!' I saw in a minuto what Chase was driving at. This cuestion had arisen, as to who were citizens, and Mr. Bates, the Attorney General, had pronounced negroes to be citizens. The law of the administration, therefore, was, that negroes were included in citizenship. As I walked away from the Cabinet that day Chase was at my side, and he said: 'Mr. Usher, we mustick to it that citizens, and not voters, be named in that proclemation.' I turned about when we had got to the Treasury, and walked back on the plank which at that time led to the White House, and I told Lincoln that Chase was very pertinacious about the word citizen instead of voters. 'Yes,' said Lincoln, 'Chase thinks that the negroes, as citizens, will all vote to make hir President.'

HIS SADNESS.

"Lincoln was, in his fixed quality, a man of sadness. If he were looking out a window when alone, and you happened to be passing by and caught his eye, you would generally see in it an expression of distress.

"He was one of the greatest men who ever lived. It has now been many years since I was in his Cabinet, and some of the things which happened there have been forgotten, and the whole of it is rather dreamy. But Lincoln's extraordinary personality is still one of the most distinct things in my memory. He was as wise as a serpent. He had the skill of the greatest statesman in the world. Everything he handled came to success. Nobody took up his work and brought it to the same perfection.

"Lincoln had more patience than anybody around him. Some times, when we were considering a thing of importance in the Cabinet, his little son would push open the door and come in with a drum and beat it up and down the room, giving us all a certain amount of misery. Mr. Lincoln, however, never ordered the boy to be taken out, but would say: 'My son, don't you think you can make a little less noise?' That Thaddeus was a stubborn little thap. We could not make up with him when he got offended. Robert was as well-behaved a young man as I have ever seen. He went to Hartford and graduated, and we entertained high respect for him.

HE KEPT HIS VOW.

"In 1831 Lincoln saw in New Orleans a colored girl sold at auction. The scene filled his soul with indignation and horror. Turning to his companions he said: 'Boys, if I ever get a chance to hit slavery, I'll hit it hard.' Thirty-one years afterwards the chance came, the oath was kept and to 4,000,000 slaves, men, women and children, was restored liberty.

Lincoln had a great laugh—a high musical tenor—and when he had listened to or told a story which particularly pleased him he would walk up and down the room, with one hand on the small of his back and the other rubbing his hair in all directions, and make things ring with laughter.

LINCOLN AND SEWARD.

"I think that Lincoln had a real fondness and admiration for Seward. There was no suspicion of rivalry whatever, between them. Seward supported Lincoln in every position or scruple that he had. My impression is, that those two men were as cordial and intimate as any two persons of such prominence could be.

"After Caleb Smith, of Indiana, was made a member of the Cabinet, he desired me to be his Assistant Secretary. Mr. Smith was nominated District Judge of the United States, in the course of time, and then Mr. Lincoln promoted me at Smith's request. I was in the Cabinet somewhat more than two years, and a part of the time was under Mr. Johnson. That Cabinet was very illassorted. My predecessor, Judge Smith, was a kind man, but without much discrimination as to his followers. There hardly was ever such a thing as a regular Cabinet meeting in the sense of form. Under Johnson and under Grant, I have seen a table with chairs placed in regular order around it, as if for Cabinet council. Nothing of that kind ever occurred in Mr. Lincoln's Cabinet: Seward would come in and lie down on a settee. Stanton hardly ever staved more than five or ten minutes. Sometimes Seward would tell the President the outline of some paper he was writing on a State matter. Lincoln generally stood up and walked about. In fact, every member of that Cabinet ran his own department in his own way. I don't suppose that such a historic period was ever so simply operated from the center of powers. Lincoln trusted all his subordinates and they worked out their own performances. I regard Seward as, on the whole, the strong man of the Cabinet, the counsel of the President, LINCOLN AND MRS. FREMONT.

"Well, there was the case of John Fremont. He had made up his mind to run a little enterprise of his own. When he got into Missouri he soon quarreled with Frank Blair, and Montgomery Blair started on to St. Louis. Meantime Mrs. Fremont came East, passing Blair on the road, and the same night she arrived went up to the President. She demanded to know what Montgomery Blair had gone to Missouri for. Mr. Lincoln said he didn't know. 'Has he gone out to remove my husband?' said Mrs. Fremont. 'You can not remove Gen. Fremont. He would not be removed.' Mr. Lincoln instantly began to talk about the difficulties of making a journey from St. Louis to Washington alone. Three or four times during the conversation she repeated, 'Gen. Fremont can not be removed.' Lincoln evaded that part of the talk every time, and she left unsatisfied.

HOW HE BECAME PRESIDENT.

"Mr. Lincoln became President mainly on account of his debute with Douglas. He had never been in any great prominence as an office-holder. His thorough-going devotion to his party brought him universal good-will, however, and he grew so harmoniously into the advocacy of Republican principles and opposition to Douglas' notion of squatter soverighty that there was a general desire to see him come forward and debate with Douglas. I can tell you something interesting about the debate. Lincoln had no money. He was in no position match a man of Douglas' financial resources. The people in Lincoln's following, however, put their hands in their pockets and subscribed for a band of music to appear with him, and that band was procured in Indiana. They put the band on a wagon to send it by the roads from point to point of meeting. Douglas meantime came on to New York and borrowed $100,000. I think he got some of it from Ben Wood and Fernando Wood. He then took a special train of cars and made a sort of triumphal tour of the State, designing to carry the Senatorship by storm. Lincoln said after the contest was over, with a certain serious grimness, 'I reckon that the campaign has cost me fully $250.' It was generally understood in the West that the same campaign cost Douglas $100,000. Lincoln's speeches against Douglas were extemporaneous, and he never revised them. My impression is that young McCullagh, now an editor in St. Louis, was the stenographer of Lincoln's speeches. Douglas did revise his remarks. They met seven times, if I remember. Lincoln reasoned so closely and carefully on Douglas' false statements that he came out of the campaign covered with respect, and instantly the movement started to make Lincoln President. I think it is due to Mr. Seward's memory to say that his extreme views on the slavery question helped to beat him.

LINCOLN'S FIRST TALK.

"With friends after receiving telegram of his nomination the first time.

(This telegram was received at the Journal office at Springfield. Immediately everybody wanted to shake his hand, and so long as he was willing, they congratulated.)

GENTLEMEN: (With a twinkle in his eye) You had better come up and shake my hand while you can; honors elevate some men, you know. Well, gentlemen, there is a little short woman at our house, who is probably more interested in this dispatch than I am; and if you will excuse me, I will take it up and let her see it.

VERY CARELESS.

"Lincoln was too careless. He would go out of his house at night and walk over to the War Department, where Staunton was receiving dispatches, unattended. I said to him: 'Lincoln you have no business to expose yourself in this way. It is known that you go out at midnight and return here sometimes at two o'clock in the morning from the War Department. It would be very easy to kill you.' The President replied that if anybody desired to assassinate him he did not suppose any amount of care would save him."

HIS PLAN OF RECONSTRUCTION.

"Lincoln would have made," says Mr. Usher, "a powerful white Republican party in every Southern State. He had that in him which would have made the Southern people support him in preference to the radical Northern politicians. Lincoln would have said in private to their leaders, 'You will have to stand in with me and help me out; otherwise Sumner and Stevens and those fellows will beat us both.' He would have said, 'You go back home and start some schools yourselves for the negroes, and put them on the route to citizenship. Let it be your own work. Make some arrangements to give them some land ultimately out of the public domain in your States. In that way you will have them your friends politically, and your prosperity will not be embarrassed.' Only M1. Lincoln could have carried out this platform. His temperament, eminence and quality all adapted him for such a great part."

MR. LINCOLN'S IMPORTANT LETTER.

"Old-time politicians," says a writer, "will readily recall the heated political campaign of 1843 in the neighboring State of Illinois. The chief interest in the campaign lay in the race for Congress in the Capitol district; which was between Hardinfiery, eloquent and impetuous Democrat; and Lincoln—plain, practical and enobled Whig. The world knows the result, Lincoln was elected.

"It is not so much with his election as with the manner in which he secured the nomination with which we have to deal. Before that ever memorable spring Lincoln vacillated between the courts of Springfield, rated as a plain, honest, logical Whig, with no ambition higher, politically, than to occupy some good home office. Late in the fall of 1842 his name began to be mentioned in connection with Congressional aspirations, which fact greatly annoyed the leaders of his political party, who had already selected as the Whig candidate, one Baker, afterward the gallant Colonel, who fell so bravely and died such an honorable death on the battlefield at Ball's Bluff, in 1862. Despite all efforts of his opponents within his party the name of the 'gaunt rail-splitter' was hailed with acclaim by the masses, to whom he had endeared himself by his witticisims, honest tongue, and quaint philosophy when on the stump or mingling with them in their homes.

"The convention, which met in early spring in the city of Springfield, was to be composed of the usual number of delegates. The contest for the nomination was spirited and exciting. A few weeks before the meeting of the convention the fact vas found by the leaders that the advantage lay with Lincoln, and that, unless they pulled some very fine wires, nothing could save Baker, They attempted to play the game that has so often won, by 'convincing' delegates under instructions for Lincoln to violate them and vote for Baker. They apparently succeeded. 'The best laid plans of mice and men aft gang aglee;' so it was in this case. Two days before the convention Lincoln received an intimation of this, and late at night indited the following letter. The letter was addressed to Martin Morris, who resides at Petersburg, an intimate friend of his, and by him circulated among those who were instructed for him at the county convention. It had the desired effect. The convention met, the scheme of the conspirators miscarried, Lincoln was triumphantly elected, thus paving the way for his more extended and brilliant conquests. This letter, Lincoln has often told his friends, gave him ultimately the Chief Magistracy of the Nation. He has also said that had he been beaten before the convention he would have been forever obscured. The following is a verbatim copy of the epistle:

""'April 14, 1843.—FRIEND MORRIS: I have heard it intimated that Baker has been attempting to get you or Miles, or both of you, to violate the instructions of the meeting that appointed you, and to go for him. I have insisted, and still insist, that this can not be true. Surely Baker would not do the like. As well might Hardin ask me to vote for him in the convention. Again, it is said there will be an attempt to get up instructions in your county requiring you to go for Baker. This is all wrong. Upon the same rule, why might not I fly from the decision against me in Sangamon, and get up instructions to their delegates to go for me? There are at least 1,200 Whigs in the county that took no part, and yet I would as soon stick my head in the fire as to attempt it. Besides, if anyone should get the nomination by such extraordinary means, all harmony in the district would inevitably be lost. Honest Whigs (and very nearly all of them are honest) would not quietly abide such enormities. I repeat, such an attempt on Baker's part can not be true. Write me at Springfield how the matter is. Don't show or speak of this letter.'

"Mr. Morris did show the letter, and Mr. Lincoln always thanked his stars that he did."

MR. LINCOLN'S SECOND INAU-GURAL ADDRESS.

(Delivered March 4, 1865, at Washington.)

"Mr. Lincoln was re-inaugurated into the Presidential office of the 4th of March, 1865. An immense crowd was in attendance—crowd of affectionate friends, not doubtful of the President, an not doubtful of one another and the future, as at the first inauguration. Chief Justice Chase administered the oath of office; and then Mr. Lincoln read his inaugural address, concerning which it has been well said that it was a paper whose Christian sentiments.

and whose reverent and pious spirit has not parallel among the state papers of the American Presidents. It showed the President still untouched by resentment, still brotherly in his feelings toward the enemies of the government, and still profoundly conscious of the overruling power of Providence in national affairs. The address was as follows:

"FELLOW-COUNTRYMEN: At this second appearing to take the oath of the Presidential office, there is less occasion for an extended address than there was at first. Then a statement somewhat in detail of a course to be pursued seemed very fitting and proper. Now, at the expriation of four years, during which public declarations have been constantly called forth from every point and phase of the great contest which still absorbs the attention and engrosses the energies of the nation, little that is now could be presented.

"The progress of our arms, upon which all else chiefly depends, is as well known to the public as to myself; and it is, I trust, reasonably satisfactory and encouraging to all. With high hope for the future, no prediction in regard to it is ventured.

"On the occasion corresponding to this four years ago, all thoughts were anxiously directed to an impending civil war. All dreaded it: all sought to avoid it. While the inaugural address was being delivered from this place, devoted altogether to saving the Union without war, insurgent agents were in the city seeking to destroy it without war-seeking to dissolve the Union and divide the effects by negotiation. Both parties deprecated war; but one of them would make war rather than let the nation survive, and the other would accept war rather than let it perish; and the war came. One-eighth of the whole population were colored slaves, not distributed generally over the Union, but localized in the southern part of it. These slaves constituted a peculiar and powerful interest. All knew that this interest was somehow the cause of the war. To strengthen, perpetuate and extend this interest was the object for which the insurgents would rend the Union, even by war, while the government claimed no right to do more than to restrict the territorial enlargement of it.

"Neither party expected for the war the magnitude or the duration which it has already attained. Neither anticipated that the cause of conflict might cease with or even before, the conflict itself should cease. Each looked for an easier triumph, and a result less fundamental and astounding.

"Both read the same Bible and pray to the same God, and each invokes his aid against the other. It may seem strange that men should dare to ask a just God's assistance in wringing their bread from the sweat of other men's faces; but let us judge not, that we be not judged. The prayers of both could not be answered fully. The Almighty has His own purposes. Woe unto the world because of offense, for it must needs be that offenses come: but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh.' If we shall suppose that American slavery is one of these offenses, which in the providence of God must needs come, but which having continued through his appointed time, he now wills to remove, and that he gives to both North and South this terrible war as the woe due to those by whom the offense came, shall we discein there in any departure from those divine attributes which the believers in a living God always ascribe to him?

"Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge of war may soon pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondsman's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid with another drawn by the sword; as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said. The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.'

"With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the nation's woulds, to care for him who shall have born the battle, and fin his widow and orphans, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and a lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations."

IN AT THE FINISH.

"Crossing a field one day President Lincoln, it is said, was pursued by an angry bull. He made for the fence," says "Life's Calendar," "but soon discovered that the bull was overtaking him. He then began to run around a haystack in the field and the bull pursued him, but in making the short circles around the stack Lincoln was the faster, and instead of the bull catching him, he caught the bull and grabbed him by the tail. It was a firm grip and a controlling one. He began to kick the bull, and the bull be lowed with agony and dashed across the field, Lincoln hanging to his tail and kicking him at every jump, and as they flew along Lincoln yelled at the bull: "Darn you, who began this fight?"

THE UGLIEST MAN HE EVER MET.

It is said that Mr. Lincoln was always ready to join in a laugh at his own expense, concerning which he was indifferent. Many of his friends will recognize the following story—the incident having actually occurred—which Lincoln always told with great glee:

"In the days when I used to be on the circuit court," said Lincoln. "I was accosted in the cars by a stranger, who said:

"Excuse me, sir, but I have an article in my possession which belongs to you."

"How is that? I asked, considerably astonished.

"The stranger took a jack-knife from his pocket. "This knife, said he, 'was placed in my hands some years ago, with the injunction that I was to keep it until I found a man uglier than myself. I have carried it from that time to this. Allow me now to say, sir that I think you are fairly entitled to the property."

MR. LINCOLN'S KINDNESS AND CONSIDERATION.

"President Liucoln," says the Hon. W. D. Kell, "was a large and many-sided man, and yet so simple that no one, not even a child, could approach him without feeling that he had found in him a sympathizing friend. I remember that I apprised Mr. Lincoln of the fact that a lad, the son of one of my townsmen, had served a year on board the gunboat Ottawa, and had been in two important engagements; in the first as a powder-monkey, when he conducted himself with such coolness that he had been chosen as captain's messenger in the second; and I suggested to the President that it was in his power to send to the Naval School, annually, three boys who had served at least a year in the navy.

"He at once wrote on the back of a letter from the commander of the Ottawa, which I had handed him, to the Secretary of the Navy: "If the appointments for this year have not yet been made, let this boy be appointed.'

"The appointment had not been made, and I brought it home with me. It directed the lad to report for examination at the school in July. Just as he was ready to start, his father, looking over the law, discovered that he could not report until he was fourteen years of ace, which he would not be until September following. The poor child sat down and wept. He feared that he was not to go to the Naval School. He was, however, soon consoled by being told that 'the President could make it right.' It was my fortune to meet him the next morning at the door of the Executiv Chamber with his father.

"Taking by the hand the little fellow—short for his age, dresse in the sailor's blue pants and shirt—I advanced with him to the President, who sat in his usual seat, and said:

"Mr. President, my young friend, Willie Bladen, finds a difficulty about his appointment. You have directed him to appear a the school in July; but he is not yet fourteen years of age.' Bu before I half finished, Mr. Lincoln, laying down his spectacles, ros and said:

"'Bless me! is that the boy who did so gallantly in those two great battles? Why, I feel that I should bow to him, and not he to me.' The little fellow had made his graceful bow.

"The President took the papers at once, and as soon as helcarned that a postponement until September would suffice, made the order that the lad should report in that month. Then putting his hand on Willie's head, he said:

"Now, my boy, go home and have good fun during the two months, for they are about the last holiday you will get.' The little fellow bowed himself out, feeling that the President of the linited States, though a very great man, was one that he would nevertheless like to have a game of romps with."

GAVE A RIGHTFUL DECISION.

Attorney-General Bates was once remonstrating with the President against the appointment of a western man of indifferent reputation as a lawyer to a judicial position of considerable importance.

"Well, now, Judge," returned Mr. Lincoln, "I think you are rather too hard on —. Besides that, I must tell you, he did me a good turn long ago. When I took to the law, I was walking to court one morning, with some ten or twelve miles of bad road before me, when — overtook me in his wagon.

"'Hallo, Lincoln!' said he; 'going to the court house?' Come in and I will give you a seat.'

"Well, I got in, and — went on reading his papers. Presently the wagon struck a stump on one side of the road; then it hopped of to the other. I looked out and saw the driver was jerking from side to side in his seat; so said I, 'Judge, I think your coachnan has been taking a drop too much this morning.'

"Well, I declare, Lincoln,' said he, 'I should not much wonder if you are right, for he has nearly upset me half a dozen times since starting.' So, putting his head out of the window, he shouted, 'Why, you infernal scoundrel, you are drunk!'

"Upon which, pulling up his horses and turning round with great gravity, the coachman said, 'Be dad! but that's the first rightful decision your honor has given for the last twelve months!"

GOD WANTED THE CHUCH FOR SOLDIERS.

"Among the numerous applicants who visited the White House one day was a well-dressed lady. She came forward without apparent embarrassment in her air or manner, and addressed the President. Giving her a very close and scrutinizing look, he said:

"Well, madam, what can I do for you?"

"She told him that she lived in Alexandria; that the church where she worshiped had been taken for a hospital.

"What church, madam?' Mr. Lincoln asked, in a quick, nervous manner.

"The —— Church,' she replied; 'and as there are only two or three wounded soldiers in it, I came to see if you would not let us have it, as we want it very much to worship God in.'

"Madam, have you been to see the Surgeon at Alexandria about this matter?'

"'Well, we put him there to attend to just such business, and it is reasonable to suppose that he knows better what should I done under the circumstances than I do. See here: You say you live in Alexandria; probably you own property there. How must will you give to assist in building a hospital?

"You know, Mr. Lincoln, our property is very much embar rassed by the war; -- so, really, I could hardly afford to give much for such a purpose.'

"'Well, madam, I expect we shall have another fight soon; are my candid opinion is, God wants that church for poor wounded Union soldiers as much as He does for secesh people to worship in.' Turning to his table, he said, quite abruptly, 'You will excuse me; I can do nothing for you. Good day, madam.'"

SIGNING THE EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION.

"The Emancipation Proclamation was taken to Mr. Lincoln at noon on the first day of January, 1863, by Secretary Seward and Frederick, his son. As it lay unrolled before him, Mr. Lincoln took a pen, dipped it in ink, moved his hand to the place for the signature, held for a moment, and then removed his hand and dropped the pen. After a little hesitation he again took up the pen and went through the same movement as before. Mr. Lincoln then turned to Mr. Seward and said:

"I have been shaking hands since nine o'clock this morning, and my right arm is almost paralyzed. If my name ever goes into history it will be for this act, and my whole soul is in it. If my hand trembles when I sign the Proclamation, all who examine the document here after will say, "He hesitated."

"He then turned to the table, took up the pen again, slowly, and firmly wrote 'Abraham Lincoln,' with which the whole world is now familiar. He then looked up, smiled, and said: "That will do.'

"Once, in Springfield, I was going off on a short journey, and reached the depot a little ahead of time. Leaning against the fence, just outside the depot, was a little darkey boy whom I knew, named 'Dick,' busily digging with his toe in a mud-puddle. As I came up, I said, 'Dick, what are you about?'

"'Making a church,' said he.

"'A church?' said I; 'what do you mean?'

"Why, yes,' said Dick, pointing with his toe, 'don't you see? there is the shape of it; there's the steps and front door—here the pews, where the folks set—and there's the pulpit.'

"'Yes, I see,' said I, 'but why don't you make a minister?'

"Laws,' answered Dick, with a grin, 'I hain't got mud enough!'"

In Abbott's "History of the Civil War," the following story is told as one of Lincoln's "hardest hits:" "I once knew," said Lincoln, "a sound churchman by the name of Brown, who was a member of a very sober and pious committee having in charge the erection of a bridge over a dangerous and rapid river. Several architects failed, and at last Brown said he had a friend named Jones, who had built several bridges and undoubtedly could build that one. So Mr. Jones was called in.

"'Can you build this bridge?' inquired the committee.

"Yes,' replied Jones, 'or any other. I could build a bridge to the infernal regions, if necessary!'

"The committee were shocked, and Brown felt called upon to cefend his friend. I know Jones so well,' said he, 'and he is so bonest a man and so good an architect, that if he states soberly and positively that he can build a bridge to—to—why, I believe it; but I feel bound to say that I have my doubts about the abutment on the infernal side."

"So," said Mr. Lincoln, "when politicians told me that the northern and southern wings of the Democracy could be harmonized, why, I believed them, of course; but I always had my doubts about the 'abutment' on the other side."

MR. LINCOLN'S POWER OF ENDURANCE.

'On Monday before the assassination, when the President was on his return from Richmond, he stopped at City Point. Calling upon the head surgeon at that place, Mr. Lincoln told him that he wished to visit all the hospitals under his charge, and shake hands with every soldier. The surgeon asked if he knew what he was undertaking, there being five or six thousand soldiers at that place, and it would be quite a tax upon his strength to visit all the wards and shake hands with every soldier. Mr. Lincoln answered, with a smile, he 'guessed he was equal to the task; at any rate he would try, and go as far as he could; he should never propably, see the boys again, and he wanted them to know that he appreciated what they had done for their country.'

"Finding it useless to try to dissuade him, the surgeon began his rounds with the President, who walked from bed to bed, extending his hand to all, saying a few words of sympathy to some, making kind inquiries of others, and welcomed by all with the heartiest cordiality.

"As they passed along, they came to a ward in which lay a rebel who had been wounded and was then a prisoner. As the tall figure of the kindly visitor appeared in sight, he was recognized by the rebel soldier who, raising himself on his elbow in bed, watched Mr. Lincoln as he approached and, extending his hand, exclaimed while tears ran down his cheeks:

"'Mr. Lincoln, I have long wanted to see you, to ask your forgiveness for ever raising my hand against the old flag.'

"Mr. Lincoln was moved to tears. He heartily shook the hand of the repentant rebel, and assured him of his good will, and with a few words of kind advice, passed on. After sore hours the tour of the various hospitals was made, and Mr. Lincoln returned with the soldier to his office. They had scarcely entered, however, when a messenger boy came, saying that one ward had been omitted, and 'the boys' wanted to see the President. The surgeon, who was thoroughly tired, and knew Mr. Lincoln must be, tried to dissuade him from going; but the good man said he must go back; he would not knowingly omit one; 'the boys' would be so disappointed. So he went with the messenger, accompanied by the surgeon, and shook hands with the gratified soldiers, and then returned again to the office.

"The surgeon expressed the fear that the President's arm would be lamed with so much hand-shaking, saying that it certainly must ache. Mr. Lincoln smiled, and saying something about his 'strong muscles,' stepped out at the open door, took up a very large, heavy axe which lay there by a log of wood, and chopped vigorously for a few moments, sending the chips flying in all directions; and then pausing, he extended his right arm to its full length, holding the axe out horizontally, without its even quivering as he held it. Strong men who looked on-men accustomed to manual labor-could not hold that same axe in that position for a moment. Returning to the office, he took a glass of lemonade, for he would take no stronger beverage; and while he was within, the ships he had chopped were gathered up and safely cared for by the hospital steward, because they were 'the chips that Father Abraham chopped."

President Lincoln was quite ill one winter at Washington, and was not inclined to listen to all the bores who called at the White liouse. One day just as one of these pests had seated himself for a long interview, the President's physician happened to enter the room, and Mr. Lincoln said, holding out his hands: "Doctor, what are those blotches?" "That's variloid, or mild small-pox," said the Doctor. "They're all over me. It is contagious, I believe?" said Mr. Lincoln. "I just called to see how you were," said the visitor. "Oh! don't be in a hurry, sir," placidly remarked the executive. "Thank you, sir; I'll call again," replied the visitor, making towards the door. "Do, sir," said the President. "Some people said they could not take very well to my proclamation, but row I have something that everybody can take." By this time the visitor was quite out of sight.

"One night the Secretary of War, with others of the Cabinet, were in the company of the President, at the Capitol, awaiting the passage of the final bills of Congress. In the intervals of reading and signing these documents, the military situation was considered—the lively conversation tinged by the confident and glowing account of General Grant, of his mastery of the position, and of his belief that a few days more would see Richmond in their possession, and the army of Lee either dispersed utterly or captured bodily—when the telegram from Grant was received, saying that Lee had asked an interview with reference to peace. Mr. Lincoln was elated, and the kindness of his heart was manifest in intimations of favorable terms to be granted to the conquered rebels.

"Stanton listened in silence, restraining his emotion, but at length the tide burst forth. 'Mr. President,' said he, 'to-morrow is mauguration day. If you are not to be the President of an obedient and united people, you had better not be inaugurated. Your work is already done, if any other authority than yours is for one moment to be recognized, or any terms made that do not signify you are the supreme head of the nation. If generals in the field are to negotiate peace, or any other chief magistrate is to be acknowledged on this continent, then you are not needed, and you had better not take the oath of office.'

"'Stanton, you are right!' said the President, his whole tone changing. 'Let me have a pen.'

"Mr. Lincoln sat down at the table, and wrote as follows:

"The President directs me to say to you that he wishes you to have no conference with General Lee, unless it be for the capitulation of Lee's army, or on some minor or military matter. He instructs me to say that you are not to decide, discuss, or confer upon any political question. Such questions the President holds in his own hands, and will submit them to no military conferences or convention. In the meantime you are to press to the utmost your military advantages."

"The President read over what he had written, and then said:

"Now, Stanton, date and sign this paper, and send it to Grant We'll see about this peace business."

"The duty was discharged only too gladly by the energette Sceretary."

HE DID NOT GET THE PASS.

"Judge Baldwin, of California, being in Washington, called one day on General Halleck, and, presuming upon a familiar acquaintance in California a few years before, solicited a pass outside of our lines to see a brother in Virginia, not thinking that he would meet with a refusal, as both his brother and himself were good Union men.

"We have been deceived too often,' said General Halleck, 'and I regret I can't grant it.'

"Judge B. then went to Stanton, and was very briefly disposed of, with the same result. Finally, he obtained an interview with Mr. Lincoln, and stated his case. "'Have you applied to General Halleck?' inquired the President.

"'Yes, and met with a flat refusal,' said Judge B.

"'Then you must see Stanton,' continued the President.

"'I have, and with the same result,' was the reply.

"'Well, then,' said Mr. Lincoln, with a smile, I can do nothing; for you must know that I have very little influence with this administration.'"

THE SWEARING WAS NECESSARY THEN.

"General Fisk, attending the reception at the White House, on one occasion saw, waiting in the ante-room, a poor old man from Tennessee. Sitting down beside him, he inquired his errand, and learned that he had been waiting three or four days to get an audience, and said that on seeing Mr. Lincoln probably depended the life of his son, who was under sentence of death for some military offense.

"General Fisk wrote his case in outline on a card, and sent it in, with a special request that the President would see the man. In a moment the order came; and past senators, governors and generals, waiting impatiently, the old man went into the President's presence.

"He showed Mr. Lincoln his papers, and he, on taking them, said he would look into the case and give him the result on the fellowing day.

"To-morrow may be too late! My son is under sentence of death! The decision ought to be made now!' and the streaming tears told how much he was moved.

"'Come,' said Mr. Lincoln, wait a bit, and I'll tell you a story,' and then he told the old man General Fisk's story about the swearing driver, as follows:

"The General had begun his military life as a Colonel, and, when he raised his regiment in Missouri, he proposed to his men that he should do all the swearing of the regiment. They assented; and for months no instance was known of the violation of the promise. The Colonel had a teamster named John Todd, who, as roads were not always the best, had some difficulty in commanding his temper and his tongue. John happened to be driving a mule team through a series of mud holes a little worse than usual, when, unable to restrain himself any longer, he burst forth into a volley of energetic oats. The Colonel took notice of the offiense, and brought John to an account.

"'John,' said he, 'didn't you promise to let me do all the swearing of the regiment?'

"'Yes, I did, Colonel,' he replied, 'but the fact is the swearing had to be done then or not at all, and you were not there to do it."

As he told the story, the old man forgot his boy, and both the President and his listener had a hearty laugh together at its conclusion. Then he wrote a few words which the old man read, and in which he found new occasion for tears; but these tears were tears of joy, for the words saved the life of his son.

ADVICE TO A BACHELOR AMBAS-SADOR.

"Upon the hetrothal of the Prince of Wales to the Princess Alexandria, Queen Victoria sent a letter to each of the European sovereigns, and also to President Lincoln, announcing the fact. Lord Lyons, her ambassador at Washington,—a "bachelor," by the way—requested an audience with Mr. Lincoln, that he might present this important document in person. At the time appointed he was received at the White House, in company with Mr. Seward.

"'May it please your Excellence,' said Lord Lyons, 'I hold in my hand an autograph letter from my royal mistress, Queen Victoria, which I have been commanded to present to your Excellency. In it she informs your Excellency that her son, his Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, is about to contract a matrimonial alliance with her Royal Highness, the Princess Alexandria of Denmark.'

"After continuing in this strain for a few minutes, Lord Lyons tendered the letter to the President and awaited his reply. It was short, simple and expressive, and consisted simply of the words:

"'Lord Lyons, go thou and do likewise.'

"It is doubtful if an English ambassador was ever addressed in this manner before, and it would be interesting to learn what success he met with in putting the reply in diplomatic language when he reported it to her Majesty."

Mr. LINCONN AS A HORSE TRADER

"When Abraham Lincoln was a lawyer in Illinois, he and a certain Judge once got to bantering one another about trading horses; and it was agreed that the next morning at 9 o'clock they should make a trade, the horse to be unseen up to that hour, and no backing out, under a forfeiture of $25.00.

"At the appointed hour the Judge came up, leading the sorriest looking specimen of a horse ever seen in those parts. In a few minutes Mr. Lincoln was seen approaching with a wooden sawhorse upon his shoulders. Great were the shouts and the laughter of the crowd, and both were greatly increased when Mr. Lincoln on surveying the Judge's animal, set down his saw horse, and exclaimed: 'Well, Judge, this is the first time I ever got the worst of it in a horse trade.'"

HIS FIRST SPEECH.

"The following first speech of Abraham Lincoln was delivered at Poppsville, Ill., just after the close of a public sale, at which time and in those early days speaking was in order. Mr. Lincoln was then but twenty-three years of age, but being called for, mounted a stump and gave a concise statement of his policy:

"'Gentlemen, Fellow-Citizens: I presume you know who I am. I am humble Abraham Lincoln. I have been solicited by many friends to become a candidate for the legislature. My politics can be briefly stated. I am in favor of the internal improvement system, and a high protective tariff. These are my sentiments and political principles. If elected, I shall be thankful. If not, it will be all the same."

"The following speech is pronounced by Mr. Lincoln himself as the best one ever made by him.

"A short time before Lincoln was assassinated, two ladies from Tennessee went before the President, asking the release of their husbands, who were held as prisoners of war at Johnson's Islands. They were put off until the following Friday, when they came again, and were again put off until Saturday. At each of the interviews one of the ladies urged that her husband was a religious man, and on Saturday when the President ordered the release of the prisoners, he said to the lady:

"You say your husband is a religious man; tell him when you meet him that I say I am not much of a judge of religion, but that, in my opinion, the religion that sets men to rebel and fight against their government, because, as they think, that government does not sufficiently help some men to eat their bread in the sweat of other men's faces, is not of the sort of religion upon which people can get to heaven."

LINCOLN'S FIRST SPEECH IN THE SUPREME COURT.

[The case being called, Mr. Lincoln appeared for appellant, and according to Judge Treat, spoke as follows]:

"Your Honor:—This is the first case I have ever had in this Court, and I have examined it with great care. As the Court will perceive by looking at the abstract of the record, the only question in the case is one of authority. I have not been able to find any authority sustaining my side of the case, but I have found several cases directly in point on the other side. I will now give the citations and then submit the case."

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S FIRST DOLLAR.

During an evening in the executive chamber there were present a number of gentlemen, among them Mr. Seward. A point in the conversation suggesting the thought, Mr Lincoln said: "Seward you never heard, did you, how I earned my first dollar?" "No," said Mr. Seward. "Well," replied Mr. Lincoln, "I was about eighteen years of age. I belonged, you know, to what they called down south the 'scrubs'—people who do not own land and slaves are nobody there. But we had succeeded in raising, chiefly by my labor, sufficient produce, as I thought, to justify me in taking it down the river to sell. After much persuasion I got the consent of my mother to go, and constructed a flatboat, large enough to take the barrel or two of things we had gathered, with myself and a little bundle, down to New Orleans. A steamboat was coming down the river. We have, you know, no wharves on the western streams, and the custom was, if passengers were at any of the landings, for them to get out in a boat, the steamer stopping and taking them on board. I was contemplating my new flatboat and wondering whether I could improve it in any particular, when two men came down to the shore in carriages, with trunks, and looking at the different boats, singled out mine, and asked 'Who owns this?' I answered, somewhat modestly, 'I do.' 'Will you.' said one of them, 'take us and our trunks out to the steamer?' 'Certainly,' said I. I was very glad to have the opportunity of earning something. I supposed that each would give me two or three bits. The trunks were put on the flatboat, the passengers seated themselves on the trunks and I sculled them out to the steamboat. They got on board, and I lifted up their trunks and put them on deck. The steamer was about to put on steam again, when I called out that they had forgotten to pay me. Each of them took from his pocket a silver half-dollar and threw it on the floor of my boat. I could scarcely believe my eyes as I picked up the money. Gentlemen, you may think it a very little thing, and in these days it seems to me like a trifle; but it was a most important incident in my life. I could scarcely credit that I, a poor boy, had earned a dollar in less than a day-that by honest work I had earned a dollar. The world seemed wider and fairer before me. I was a more hopeful and confident being from that time."

"Soon after Mr. Lincoln entered upon his profession at Spring-field, he was engaged in a criminal case, in which it was thought there was little chance of success. Throwing all his powers into it, he came off victorious, and promptly received for his services five hundred dollars. A legal friend, calling upon him the next morning, found him sitting before a table, upon which his money was spread out, counting it over and over.

"Look here, Judge,' said Lincoln; 'see what a heap of moneappor I've got from the - case. Did you ever see anything like it wast Why. I never had so much money in my life before, put it altonay, gether.' Then crossing his arms upon the table, his manne sobering down, he added, 'I have got just five hundred dollars o if it were only seven hundred and fifty, I would go directly and purchase a quarter section of land, and settle it upon my old step-mother.'

"His friend said that if the deficiency was all he needed he would loan him the amount, taking his note, to which Mr. Lincoln instantly acceded.

"His friend then said: "Lincoln, I would not do just what you have indicated. Your step-mother is getting old, and will not probably live many years. I would settle the property upon her his for her use during her lifetime, to revert to you upon her death.' Ho

"With much feeling, Mr. Lincoln replied: 'I shall do no such thing. It is a poor return, at the best, for all the good woman's devotion and fidelity to me, and there is not going to be any halfway business about it;' and so saying, he gathered up his money and proceeded forthwith to carry his long-cherished purpose into execution."

"A little fact in Lincoln's work will illustrate his ever present desire to deal honestly and justly with men. He had always a partner in his professional life, and, when he went out upon the circuit, this partner was usually at home. While out, he frequently took up and disposed of cases that were never entered at the office. In these cases, after receiving his fees, he divided the money in his pocket-book, labeling each sum (wrapped in a piece of paper), that belonged to his partner, stating his name, and the case on which it was received. He could not be content to keep an account. He ded the money, so that if he, by an casualty, should fail of an ortunity to pay it over, there could be no dispute as to the ct amount that was his partner's due. This may seem trivial, boyish, but it was like Mr. Lincoln."

MR. LINCOLN'S CHARITABLE NATURE.

It was not possible for Mr. Lincoln to regard his clients simply the light of business. An unfortunate man was the subject of sympathy. A Mr. Cogdal, who related this instance to Mr. lland, met with a financial wreck in 1843. He employed Mr. coln as his lawyer, and at the close of the business, gave him to the to cover the regular lawyer's fees. He was soon after blown by an accidental discharge of powder, and lost his hand. Leting Mr. Lincoln sometime after the accident, on the steps of a State House, the kind lawyer asked him how he was getting ang.

"Badly enough," replied Mr. Cogdal, 'I am both broken up in siness and crippled." Then he added, 'I have been thinking about at note of ours.'

'Mr. Lincoln, who had probably known all about Mr. Cogdal's publes and had prepared himself for the meeting, took out his eket-book, and saying, with a laugh, 'Well, you needn't think ything more about it,' handed him the note.

Mr. Cogdal protesting, Mr. Lincoln said, 'If you had the money wouldn't take it,' and hurried away.

"At the same date, he was frankly writing about his poverty to s friends, as a reason for not making them a visit, and probably und it no easy task to take care of his family, even when board the Globe Tavern was only four dollars a week."

MR. LINCOLN'S LEGAL ACUMEN

"Senator McDonald states that he saw a jury trial in Illinois, which Lincoln defended an old man charged with assault and battery. No blood had been spilled, but there was malice in the prosecution and the chief witness was eager to make the most of it. On cross-examination, Lincoln gave him rope and drew him out; asking him how long the fight lasted, and how much ground it covered. The witness thought the fight must have lasted at hour, and covered an acre of ground. Lincoln called his attention to the fact that nobody was hurt, and then, with an inimitable and asked him if he didn't think it was 'a mighty small crop for an acre of ground.' The jury rejected the case with contempt, as beneath the dignity of twelve grave, good men and true.

J. H. Wickizer, a lawyer, gives the following as Lincoln's first proclamation of freedom. It was given one day when the two lawyers were riding in a buggy from Woodford County Court to Bloomington, Ill. When passing through a grove, they suddenly heard the terrific squealing of a little pig near by, occasioned by an old hog that was about to eat up one of her young ones. Quick as thought Lincoln leaped out of the buggy, seized a club, bounced upon and beat the hog, and saved the pig, remarking as he jumped back in the buggy: "By jing! The unnatural old brute shall not devour her own progeny!"

MR. LINCOLN AMONG THE CHILDREN.

"It was during a visit to New York that the following incident ccurred, as related by a teacher in the Five Points House of adustry in that city. Our Sunday school in the Five Points had ssempled, one Sabbath morning, a few months since, when I oticed a tall and remarkable looking man enter the room and ake a seat among us. He listened with fixed attention to our xercises, and his countenance manifested such genuine interest hat I approached him and suggested that he might be willing to ay something to the children. He accepted the invitation with vident pleasure and coming forward began a simple address, which t once fascinated every little hearer and hushed the room into lence. His language was strikingly beautiful, and his tones usical with intense feeling. The little faces around him would roop into sad conviction as he uttered sentences of warning and ould brighten into sunshine as he spoke cheerful words of romise. Once or twice he attempted to close his remarks, but he imperative shout of 'Go on,' 'Oh, do go on,' would compel him o resume. As I looked upon the gaunt and sinewy frame of the franger, and marked his powerful head and determined features, low touched into softness by the impressions of the moment, I felt n irrepressible curiosity to learn something more about him, and when he was leaving the room, I begged to know his name. He ourteously replied, 'It is Abraham Lincoln, from Illinois.'"

THE SHIELDS-LINCOLN DUEL.

"The late Gen. Shields was Auditor of the State of Illinois in 839. While he occupied this important office he was involved in in 'affair of honor' with a Springfield lawyer—no less personage than Abraham Lincoln. At this time, 'James Shiel Auditor,' was the pride of the young Democracy, and was consered a dashing fellow by all, the ladies included. In the summ of 1842 the Springfield Journal contained some letters from to 'Lost Township,' by a contributor whose nom de plume was 'Au Becca,' which held up the gallant young Auditor as 'a ball-rood dandy, floatin' about on the earth without heft or substance, ju line a lot of cat-fur where the cats had been fightin'.'

"These letters caused intense excitement in the town. Nobod knew or guessed their authorship. Shields swore it would be coffe and pistols for two if he should find out who had been lampooning him so unmercifully. Thereupon 'Aunt Becca' wrote anothe letter, which made the furnace of his wrath seven times hotter than before, in which she made a very humble apology, and offered to let him squeeze her hand for satisfaction, adding:

"'If this should not answer, there is one thing more I would rather do than to get a lickin'. I have all along expected to die widow; but as Mr. Shields is rather good looking than otherwise I must say I don't care if we compromise the matter by-really. Mr. Printer, I can't help blushin'-but I-must come out-I-but widowed modesty-well, if I must, I must, -wouldn't he-maybe sorter let the old grudge drap if I was to consent to be-be-his wife? I know he is a fightin' man, and would rather fight than eat; but isn't marryin' better than fightin,' though it does some times run into it? Any I don't think, upon the whole, I'd be sich a bad match, neitheor; I'm not over sixty, and am just four feet three in my bare feet, and not much more round the girth; and for color, I wouldn't turn my back on nary girl in the Lost Town ships. But, after all, maybe I'm countin' my chickens before they're hatched, and dreamin' of matrimonial bliss when the only alternative reserved for me may be a lickin'. Jeff tells me the way these fire-caters do is to give the challenged party the choice of weapons, which being the case, I tell you in confidence, I never fight with anything but broomsticks or hot water, or a shovelful of coals or some such thing; the former of which being somewhat like a shillalah, may not be so very objectionable to him. I will give him a choice, however, in one thing, and that is whether, when we fight, I shall wear breeches or he petticoats, for I presume this change is sufficient to place us on an equality.

"Of course someone had to shoulder the responsibility of these letters after such a shot. The real author was none other than Miss Mary Todd, afterward the wife of Abraham Lincoln, to whom she was engaged, and who was in honor bound to assume, for belligerent purposes, the responsibility of her sharp pen-thrusts. Mr. Lincoln accepted the situation. Not long after the two men, with their seconds, were on their way to the field of honor. But the affair was fixed up without any fighting, and thus ended in a fizzle the Lincoln-Shields duel of the Lost Aownships."

MR. LINCOLN TELLS A SECRET.

"When the Sherman expedition which captured Port Royal went out, there was a general curiosity to know where it had gone. A person visiting President Lincoln at his official residence importuned him to disclose the destination.

"'Will you keep it entirely secret?' asked the President.

"'Oh yes, upon my honor.'

"'Well,' said the President, 'I'll tell you.' Assuming an air of great mystery, and drawing the man close to him, he kept him a moment awaiting the revelation with an open mouth and in great anxiety, and then said in a loud wnisper, which was heard all over the room, 'The expedition has gone to—sea.'" out only three persons were present. Mr. Lincoln was to have spoken on the slavery question.

THE AGE IS NOT DEAD.

GENTLEMEN: This meeting is larger than I knew it would be as I knew Herndon (Lincoln's partner) and myself would be here but I did not know anyone else would be here; and yet another has come—you, John Pain (the janitor).

These are bad times, and seem out of joint. All seems dead, dead, dead; but the age is not yet dead; it liveth as sure as our Maker liveth. Under all this seeming want of life and motion, the world does move nevertheless. Be hopeful. And now let us adjourn and appeal to the people.

HIS NOISE DIDN'T HURT ANYBODY

"When General Phelps took possession of Ship Island, near New Orleans, early in the war, it will be remembered that he issued a proclamation, somewhat bombastic in tone, freeing the slaves. To the surprise of many people, on both sides, the President took no official notice of this movement. Some time had elapsed, when one day a friend took him to task for his seeming indifference on so important a matter.

"'Well,' said Mr. Lincoln, 'I feel about that a good deal as a man whom I will call 'Jones,' whom I once knew ,did about his wife. He was one of your meek men, and had the reputation of being badly henpecked. At last, one day his wife was seen switching him out of the house. A day or two afterward a friend met him on the street, and said: 'Jones, I have always stood up for you, as you know; but I am not going to do it any longer. Any man who will stand quietly and take a switching from his wife, deserves to be horsewhipped.' Jones looked up with a wink, patting his friend on the back. 'Now, don't,' said he; 'why, it didn't hurt me any; and you've no idea what a power of good it did Sarah Ann.'"

HE PREFERRED GRAN'S WHISKY

"Just previous to the fall of Vicksburg, a self-constituted committee, solicitous for the morals of our armies, took it upon themselves to visit the President and urge the removal of General Grant.

"In some surprise Mr. Lincoln inquired, 'For what reason?'
"'Why,' replied the spokesman, 'he drinks too much whisky.'

"'Ah!' rejoined Mr. Lincoln, dropping his lower lip. 'By the way, gentlemen, can either of you tell me where General Grant procures his whisky? Because, if I can find out, I will send every General in the field a barrel of it!'"

AN APPROPRIATE ILLUSTRATION

"At the White House one day some gentlemen were present from the West, excited and troubled about the commissions or omissions of the Administration. The President heard them patiently, and then replied: 'Gentlemen, suppose all the property you were worth was in gold, and you had put it in the hands of Blondin to carry across the Niagara River on a rope, would you shake the cable, or keep shouting out to him, 'Blondin, stand up a little straighter—Blondin stoop a little more—go a little faster—lean a little more to the north—lean a little more to the south?' No! you would hold your breath as well as your tongue, and keep your hands off until he was safely over. The Government are carrying an immense weight. Untold treasures are in their hands. They are doing the very best they can. Don't badger them. Keep silence, and they'll get you safely across.'"

A SHORT SPEECH.

"Ladies and Gentlemen: I appear to say but a word. This extraordinary war in which we are engaged falls heavily upon all classes of people, but the most heavily upon the soldier. For it has been said, all that a man hath will be give for ais life; and while all contribute of their substance, the soldier puts his life at stake and often yields it up in his country's cause. The highest merit, then, is due to the soldier.

"In this extraordinary war, extraordinary developments have manifested themselves, such as have not been seen in former wars and among these manifestations nothing has been more remarkable than these fairs for the relief of suffering soldiers and their families. And the chief agents of these fairs are the women of America.

"I am not accustomed to the use of the language of eulogy; have never studied the art of paying compliments to women; but I must say that, if all that has been said by orators and poets were applied to the women of America, it would not do them justice for their conduct during this war. I will close by saying God bless the women of America."

HE SWORE LIKE MR. SEWARD.

"Secretary Seward was an Episcopalian. On one of the occasions when President Lincoln's patience was tried by a self-appointed adviser who got warm and used strong language, Mr. Lincoln terrupted him by saying: 'You are an Episcopalian, aren't you' nd when asked why he thought so, said: 'You swear just like r. Seward, and he is.' This was Mr. Lincoln's way of getting d of such advisers."

THE GLOVES KNOCKED THEM OUT.

"Mr. Lincoln's habits at the White House were as simple as they ere at his old home in Illinois. He never alluded to himself as 'resident,' or as occupying 'the Presidency.' His office, he always esignated as 'this place.' 'Call me Lincoln,' said he to a friend—fr. President' had become so very tiresome to him. 'If you see newsboy down the street, send him up this way,' said he to a assenger, as he stood waiting for the morning news at his gate, riends cautioned him against exposing himself so openly in the idst of enemies; but he never heeded them. He frequently alked the streets at night entirely unprotected; and he felt any teck on his free movements as a great annoyance. He delighted 'see his familiar Western friends, and he gave them always a rdial welcome. He met them on the old footing, and fell at once to the accustomed habits of talk and story-telling.

"An old acquaintance, with his wife, visited Washington. Mr. ad Mrs. Lincoln proposed to these friends to ride in the Presintial carriage. It should be stated, in advance, that the two en had probably never seen each other with gloves on in their ves, unless they were used as protection from the cold.

"The question of each—Mr. Lincoln at the White House, and is friend at the hotel—was, whether he should wear gloves. Of Purse, the ladies urged gloves; but Mr. Lincoln only put his in his beket, to be used or not, 'according to circumstances.'

"When the Presidential party arrived at the hotel, to take in heir friends, they found the gentleman, overcome by his wife's rersuasions, very handsomely gloved. The moment he took his seat he began to draw off the clinging kids, while Mr. Lincoln began to draw his on!

"'No! no! no!' protested the friend, tugging at his gloves. 'It is none of my doings; put up your gloves, Mr. Lincoln.'

"So the two old friends were on even and easy terms, and had their ride after the old fashion."

LETTER TO A WIDOW WHO HAD LOST FIVE SONS IN THE WAR.

Executive Mansion,

Washington, November 21, 1864.

Dear Madam: I have been shown in the files of the War Department, a statement of the Adjutant General of Massachusetts, that you are the nother of five sons who have died gloriously on the field of battle. I feel how weak and fruitless must be any words of mine, which should attempt to beguile you from the grief of a loss so overwhelming. But I can not refrain from tendering to you the consolation that may be found in the thanks of a republic they died to save. I pray that our Heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavement and leave you only the cherished memory of the loved and lost, and the solemn pride that must be yours, to have laid so costly a sacrifice upon the altar of freedom.

Yours, very sincerely and respectfully,

A. LINCOLN.

"An amusing story is attributed to President Lincoln, about the Iowa First, and the changes which certain password underwest about the time of the battle of Springfield.

One of the Dubuque officers, whose duty it was to furnish the rds with a password for the night, gave the word 'Potomac.' Jerman on guard, not comprehending distinctly the difference ween B's and P's, understood it to be 'Bottomic,' and this, on any transferred to another, was corrupted into 'Buttermilk.' on afterward the officer who had given the word wished to return ough the lines, and on approaching a sentinel was ordered to t and the word demanded. He gave the word 'Potomac.'

''Nicht right; you don't pass mit me dis way.'

"But this is the word, and I will pass."

"'No, you stan,' at the same time placing a bayonet at his east, in a manner that told the officer that 'Potomac' didn't pass Missouri.

"'What is the word, then?"

"'Buttermilk.'

"'Dat is right; you pass mit yourself all about your piziness.'
"There was then a general overhauling of the password and, the fference between Potomac and Butternilk being understood, the ke became one of the laughable incidents of the campaign."

TRIPLETS NAMED BY MR.

000000000000000

"In South Starksboro, Addison County, Vt., according to the furlington Free Press, there are residing triplets, sons of Leonard Iaskins, born May 24, 1864, and named by President Linco'n. hey have in their possession a letter from the hand of the nartyr President, and the names given were Abraham Lincoln, sideon Welles and Simon Cameron. They are the children of American parents (who are still living) of limited circumstances, and have led a very retired life; are robust, intelligent, and moral, and have always been abstainers from liquor and profanity. There is an almost perfect resemblance between two, who are light complexioned, while the other is a striking contrast, having dark hair and eyes."

LINCOLN' VALUE OF A BRIGADIER.

In the early part of the war a lady devoted to the cause of the confederate states and who resided just outside of the Union lines in Virginia, managed to fascinate General Staughton, a young West Point cavalry officer, and one evening while he was enjoying her society, during a serenade by a regimental band, he, with his band and orderlies, was suprised and captured, and they were sent as prisoners of war to Richmond. "I do not mind losing the Brigadier," said Mr. Lincoln, in talking about the capture, "for they are easily made, but there were some twenty horses taken, and they cost one hundred and twenty-five dollars apiece."

HOW ALEXANDER H. STEVENS IM-PRESSED MR. LINCOLN.

"In January, 1865, a committee of peace commissioners from the confederate states, of which Mr. Stevens was a member, arrived at City Point, Va., and requested General Grant to telegraph President Lincoln that they desired to meet him. A few days later Mr. Lincoln met them at Hampton Roads. At the time Mr. Stevens, who was a very small man, weighing less than one hundred pounds, was wearing a heavy woolen overcoat which reached nearly to his feet, giving him the appearance of an averaged sized man. He took off his overcoat after meeting the President, who seemed struck with Mr. Stevens' apparent change of size, in the coat and out of it. On meeting General Grant, Lincoln asked him if he had seen that overcoat of Stevens'. Grant replied that he had. 'Well,' said the President, 'did you see him take it off?' Grant replied that he did. 'Well,' said he, 'didn't you think it was the biggest shuck and the littlest ear that you ever did see?'" ie of the last stories heard from Mr. Lincoln was concerning Tyler, for whom it was to be expected, as an old Henry Clay he would entertain no great respect. loncerning a drollery of President Lincoln, this story is told: During the Rebellion an Austrian Count applied to President coln for a position in the army. Being introduced by the Aus n Minister, he needed, of course, no further recommendation; as if fearing that his importance might not be duly appreed, he proceeded to explain that he was a Count; that his ily were ancient and highly respectable; when Lincoln, with erry twinkle in his eye, tapping the aristocratic lover of titles the shoulder, in a fatherly way, as if the man had confessed to e wrong, interrupted in a soothing tone, 'Never mind; you shall reated with just as much consideration for all that."

STANTON ADVISED TO PPREPARE FOR DEATH.

"The imperious Stanton, when Secretary of War, took a fancy one day to a house in Washington that Lamon had just bargained for. He ordered the latter to vacate instanter. Lamon not only did not vacate, but went to Stanton and said he would kill him if he interfered with the house. Stanton was furious at the threat, and made it known at once to Lincoln. The latter said to the astonished War Secretary:

"Well, Stanton, if Lamon has said he will kill you, he certainly will, and I'd advise you to prepare for death without further delay."

"The President promised, however, to do what he could to appease the nurderous Marshal, and this was the end of Stanton's attempt on the house."

"Lincoln's opponent for the Legislature in 1836 was the Hon-Geo. Forquer, of Springfield, Ill., who was celebrated for having introduced the first and only lightning rod in Springfield at this time. He said in a speech, in Lincoln's presence, 'this young man (Lincoln) would have to be taken down, and I am sorry the task devolves upon me;' and then proceeded to try and 'take him donw.' Mr. Lincoln made a reply, and in closing, turned to the crowd and made these remarks:

"Fellow-Citizens: It is for you, not for me, to say whether I am up, or down. The gentleman has alluded to my being a young man; I am older in years than I am in the tricks and trades of politicians. I desire to live, and desire place and distinction as a politician; but I would rather die now than, like the gentleman, ive to see the day that I would have to erect a lightning rod to protect a guilty conscience from an offended God."

"An editorial, in a New York journal, opposing Lincoln's renom ination, is said to have called out from him the following story: 'A traveler on the frontier found himslef out of his reckoning one night in a most inhospitable region. A terrific thunder-storm came up to add to his trouble. He floundered along until at length his horse gave out. The lightning afforded him the only clue to his way, but the peals of thunder were frightful. One bolt, which seemed to crash the earth beneath him, brought him to his knees. I'y no means a praying man, his petition was short and to the point—'O, Lord, if it is all the same to you, give us a little more light and a little less noise!'"

[Delivered at the dedication of the Gettysburg National Cemetery, on the Gettysburg battle-field, Nov. 19, 1863.]

"Ladies and Gentlemen: Four score and seve nyears ago, our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

"But in a larger sense we can not dedicate, we can not consecrate, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here.

"It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before, that from those honored dead we take increased devotion to the cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that the government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

"Immediately after Mr. Lincoln's nomination for President at the Chicago Convention, a committee, of which Governor Morgan, of New York, was chairman, visited him in Springfield, Ill., where he was officially informed of his nomination.

"After this ceremony had passed, Mr. Lincoln remarked to the company, that as an appropriate conclusion to an interview so important and interesting as that which has just transpired, he supposed good manners would require that he should treat the company with something to drink; and opening a door that led into a room in the rear, he called out, 'Mary! Mary!' A girl responded to the call, to whom Mr. Lincoln spoke a few words in an ertone, and, closing the door, returned to converse with hists. In a few minutes the maiden entered, bearing a large ter, containing several glass tumblers, and a large pitcher in the st, and placed it upon the center-table. Mr. Lincoln arose and vely addressing the containty, said: 'Gentlemen, we must light our mutual healths in the most healthy beverage which I has given to man—it is the only beverage I have ever used on my family, and I can not conscientiously depart from this present occasion—it is pure Adam's ale from the spring; I, taking a tumbler, he touched it to his lips, and pledged them highest respects in a cup of cold water. Of course all his ests were constrained to admire his consistency, and to join in example."

In response to an address from the Sons of Temperance in ashington, on the 29th of September, 1863, Mr. Lincoln made to following remarks:

"As a matter of course, it will not be possible for me to make a response co-extensive with the address which you have presented to me. If I were better known than I am, you would not need to be told that, in advocacy of the cause of temperance, you have a friend and sympathizer in me. When a young man—long ago—before the Sons of Temperance, as an organization had an existence, I, in an humble way, made temperance speeches, and I think I may say that to this day I have never, by my example belied what I then said.

"In regard to the suggestions which you make for the purpose of the advancement of the cause of temperance in the army. I cannot make particular response to them at this time. To prevent intemperance in the army is even a part of the articles of war. It is a part of the law of the land, and was so, I presume, long ago to dismiss officers for drunkenness. I am not sure that, consistent with public service, more can be done than has been done. All there fore, that I can promise is (if you will be pleased to furnish me with a copy of your address) to have it submitted to the proper department, and have it considered, whether it contains and suggestions which will improve the cause of drunkenness in the army any better man it is already done. I can promise no more than that.

"I think the reasonable men of the world have long since agreed that intemperance is one of the greatest, if not the very greatest, of all evils among mankind. That is not a matter of dispute, I believe. That the disease exists, and that it is a very great one, is agreed upon by all. The mode of cure is one about which there may be differences of opinions. You have suggested that in an army—our army drunkenness is a great evil, and one which while it exists to a very great extent, we canot expect to overcome so entirely as to leave such success in our arms as we might have without it. This, undoubtedly, is true, and while it is, perhaps, rather a bad source to derive comfort from, nevertheless in a hard struggle. I do not know but what it is some consolation to be aware that there is some intemperance on the other side, too; and that they have no right to beat us in physical combat on that ground. But I have already said more than I expected to be able to say when I began, and if you please to hand me a copy of your address, it shall be considered. I thank you very heartily gentlemen for this call and for bringing with you these very many pretty ladies."

"Among the visitors on one of the President's reception days, was the Hon. Thomas Shannon, of California. Soon after the customary greeting, Mr. Shannon said:

'Mr. President, I met an old friend of yours in California last nmer ,Thomas Campbell, who had a good deal to say of your ringfield life.' >

"'Ah!' returned Mr. Lincoln, I am glad to hear of him. Campll used to be a dry fellow,' he continued. 'For a time he was cretary of State. One day during the legislative vacation, a sek, cadaverous-looking man, with a white neck-cloth, introduced mself to him at his office, and, stating that he had been informed at Mr. C. had the letting of the Assembly Chamber, said that he ished to secure it, if possible, for a course of lectures he desired deliver in Springfield.

"'May I ask,' said the Secretary, 'what is to be the subject of our lectures?'

"'Certainly,' was the reply, with a very solemn expression of ountenance. "The course I wish to deliver is on the Second oming of our Lord.'

"It is of no use,' said C. 'If you will take my advice, you will ot waste your time in this city. It is my private opinion that if he Lord has been in Sprinfield once, He will not come the second ime.'"

In the April (1894) number of the Century John G. Nicolay writes of "Lincoln's Literary Experiments," and quote a poem written by the President in his young manhood. In a letter enclosing the poem to a friend, Lincoln explains that the verses were written in 1844, when he visited the neighborhood in which he was raised, on a stumping tour. Here are the opening stanzas:

My childhood's home I see again,
And sudden with the view;
And still, as memory crowds my brain.
There's pleasure in it, too.

O Memory! thou midway world
'Twixt earth and paradise,
Where things decayed and loved ones lost
In dreamy shadows rise,

And, freed from all that's earthly vile,
Seem hallowed, pure and bright,
Like scenes in some enchanted isle
All bathed in liquid light.

He loved the thrush—'twas such a gentle bird,

That sang in strains of cheerful melody;
But since he died its note has not been heard,

It droops beneath the weeping willow tree!
Clear as the rill of fountains ere the frost

Of winter lays a seal upon their lips;

Nor broken by the prow of sturdy ships;
Now plaintive as when maids at prayer entreat

For absolution—the bird gushed forth a stram of soul-lit music, till one, quick heart heart,

(Roused by the dyir g eagle's anguished scream)
Shriveled all to diamond notes, which heaven displayed,

To show his death had even the gods dismayed!

Mr. William Bender Wilson, of Lancaster, Pa., who entered the War Department as a military telegrapher in 1861, gives the following fresh anecdote:

"In the fall of 1861 fires in Washington City were of frequent occurrence, without any organized adequate means for extinguishing them being in existence there. This condition of affairs was a source of so much anxiety to the country at large that no sooner was a Washington fire announced in the newspapers than the mails would teem with patriotic offers to the President from all sections for the formation of fire brigades as a component part of the army for the protection of the Capital. This was one of the great annoyances of irrelevant subjects thrust upon the President. He bore it al! as part of the responsibilities resting upon him, yet at last was compelled to rebuke it from sheer lack of time to give it any attention.

"One night the Washington infirmary burned down, and, was customary after such disasters, the next day brought the President the usual complement of offers of fire engines and firemen. Philadelphia's patriotism, true to its traditions, could not await the slow progress of the mail, but sent forward a committee of citizens to urge upon the President the acceptance of a fully equipped fire brigade for Washington. On their arrival at the White House they were most courteously and blandly received by Mr. Lincoln. Eloquently did they urge their mission, but valuable time was being wasted, and Mr. Lincoln was forced to bring the conference to a close, which he did by interrupting the committee in the midst of a grand and to be clinching oratorical effort by gravely saying, as if he had just awakened to the true import of the visit: 'Ah, ves, gentlemen, but it is a mistake to suppose that I am at the head of the fire department of the City of Washington! I am simply President of the United States!"

TAD LINCOLN.

Thomas Lincoln, or Tad, as he was familiarly called, was given a soldierly bent by the military displays. Dressed in full uniform and thoroughly equipped, although but 12 years of age at the time, he afterward appeared in the camps of the army, and, mounted upon a Shetland pony, rode beside his father when reviewing the troops as commander in chief.

Surprising Incident Related by Gen. Lew Wallace—Why
Lincoln Was Greatly Worried.

One of the most interesting speeches delivered at the Lincoln banquet here, in which 500 people, including most of the State officials, participated, was that of General Lew Wallace. The address for the most part dealt with personal reminiscences of the great emanicaptor. In concluding his remarks the speaker said:

"I will tell you at this time of an incident which I have never before made public. I do not know that it is proper, but the man whom it is about is dead, and I will relate it. I had made an engagement with Lincoln to call at the White House and present two ladies who desired to meet him. The time set for the call was at 11 a. m. At the appointed hour I presented myself in company with the ladies. As I was ushered in I saw, at the farther end of the room, the tall form of Lincoln leaning against a window. He waved his hand, indicating that I was to take the ladies to a sofa and then by another wave of the hand he motioned for me to come to him. My heart filled with sympathy for him, for I knew something was wrong.

"As I approached him and looked into his face it seemed to me it was the saddest and most troubled countenance I had ever beheld. There were deep lines of suffering about the face, the features were drawn and pinched. His hair, which had grown thin, was uncombed. He was naturally somewhat stoop-shouldered, but seemed to be especially so on this occasion. As I drew nearer and caught his eye I was more deeply impressed with the sadness which permeated his whole being. If I were to live a thousand years I would not forget the anguish of the expression of his face.

"I said: 'Mr. Lincoln, I hope you are not sick?'

"He replied; 'No, I am not sick."

"'But,' said I. 'You look sad. Something terrible must have appened.'

"He made no reply, but calling a servant, he inquired how long t would be until the boat left the wharf for Harrison's Landing the answer was, 'In half an hour.' Then turning to me, Lincoln said, and the sadness of his face deepened as he said it, 'I must go on that boat to Harrison's Landing on the James River.'

"'What for, Mr. Lincoln?' I asked in surprise.

"His voice dropped to a whisper as he replied: "I must go there to keep McClellan from surrendering the army."

"It was after the seven days' battle, and the leader of the great army was retreating before the confederates.

"At this point I introduced the ladies and retired. In thirty minutes Lincoln was on board the boat speeding away on his mission. The next I heard of Lincoln he was at Harrison's Landing, and the Union army was not surrendered."

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES ON LIFE OF LINCOLN.

On the 12th of February, 1809, in the wilderness of Larue County, Kentucky, was born one of the best and greatest men that ever lived—Abraham Lincoln. His father was a poor farmer, and in the rude life of the backwoods his entire schooling did not exceed a year, but while at school he was noted as a good speller. but more particularly for his hatred of cruelty—his earliest composition Leing a protest against putting coals of fire on the backs of captured terrapins. He wore coarse, home-made clothes and a coonskin cal. and his trousers, owing to his rapid growth (before his 17th birthday he was at his maximum of 6 feet 4 inches), were almost always nearly a foot too short. His last attendance at school was in 1826, when he was 17 years old, but after leaving it he read everything readable within his reach, and copied passages and centences that especially attracted him. His first knowledge of the law, in which he afterwards became eminent, was through reading the statutes of Indiana, lent to him by a constable, and he obtained a tolerable knowledge of grammar, also from a borrowed book, studied by the light of burning shavings in a cooper's shop. after his family had, in 1830, emigrated to Illinois. In 1834 he was elected to the Illinois Legislature—was three times re-elected—was admitted to practive law in 1836, and then removed to Springfield. the State capital. In 1846 he was elected to Congress, where he voted against the extension of slavery, and 1854 was a recognized leader in the newly-formed Republican party. In 1860 he was nominated for the Presidency, received a majority of votes over any of the other candidates and was installed in the President's chair March 4, 1861. His election was followed by the secession of eleven Southern States and a war for the restoration of the Union. As a military measure he proclaimed Jan. 1, 1863, the freedom of all slaves in the seceding States; and was re-elected to the Presidency in 1864. The war brought to a close April 2, 1865, and on the 15th of the same month Abraham Lincoln's life was ended by the hand of an assassin. Thus, when he

Had mounted Fame's ladder so high

From the round at the top he could step to the sky, the great President passed to his rest. Twice elected to his high office, ne was torn from it in the moment of triumph, to be placed side by side with Washington, the one the father, the other the savior of the Union; one the founder of a republic, the other the liberator of a race.

LINCOLN'S ASSASSINATION.

So soon as it was known in the autumn of 1860 that Abraham Lincoln was to be the next President of the United States, he was at once beset by two pests; the office-seekers, and the men who either warned him to fear assassination or anonymously threatened him with it. Of the two, the office-seekers annoyed him by far the more; they came like the plague of locusts, and devoured his time and his patience. His contempt and disgust towards them were unutterable; he said that the one purpose in life with at least one-half of the nation scemed to be that they should live comfortably at the expense of the other half. But it was the fashion of the people, and he was obliged to endure the affliction, however it might stir his indignation and contempt. The matter of assassination he was more free to treat as he chose. A curious incident, strangely illustrating the superstitious element in his nature, was narrated by him as follows:

"It was just after my election in 1860, when the news had been coming in thick and fast all day, and there had been a great 'hurrah boys!' so that I was well tired out and went home to rest. throwing myself upon a lounge in my chamber. Opposite to where I lay was a bureau with a swinging glass upon it; and, in looking in that glass, I saw myself reflected nearly at full length; but my face, I noticed, had two separate and distinct images, the tip of the nose of one being three inches from the tip of the other. I was a little bothered, perhaps startled, and got up and looked in the glass; but the illusion vanished. On lying down again I saw it a second time, plainer, if possible, than before; and then I noticed that one of the faces was a little paler—say five shades than the other. I got up and the thing melted away; and I went off, and in the excitement of the hour forgot all about it,-nearly, but not quite, for the thing would once in a while come up, and rive me a little pang, as though something uncomfortable had lappened. When I went home, I told my wife about it; and a few days after I tried the experiment again, when, sure enough, the thing came back again; but I never succeeded in bringing the rhost back after that, though I once tried very industriously to show it to my wife, who was worried about it somewhat. She thought it was 'a sign' that I was to be elected to a second term of office, and that the paleness of one of the faces was an omen that I should not see life through the last term."

From this time forth anonymous threats and friendly warnings came thick and fast up to the fatal day when the real event befell. Some of these he kept, labelled "Assassination Letters." Before he left Springfield for his journey to Washington, many Ingenious fears were suggested to him; but, except for his change of route toward the close of his journey, none of these presagings visibly influenced him, and his change of purpose concerning the passage through Baltimore was never afterward recalled by him without vexation. From that time forth he resolutely ignored all danger of this kind. During most of the time that he was in office any one could easily call upon him, unguarded, at the White House: he moved through the streets of Washington like any private citizen; and he drove about the environs, and habitually in the warm season took the long drive to and from the Soldiers' Home, with substantially no protection. When, at last, a guard at the White House and an escort upon his drives were fairly forced upon him by Mr. Stanton (who was declared by the gossip of the unfriendly to be somewhat troubled with physical timidity). he rebelled against these incumbrances upon his freedom, and submitted, when he had to do so, with an ill grace. To those who remonstrated with him upon his carelessness he made various replies. Sometimes, half jocosely, he said that it was hardly likely that any intelligent Southerner would care to get rid of him in order to set either Vice President Hamlin or, later, Vice President Johnson, in his place. At other times he said: "What is the use of setting up the gap, when the fence is down all round?" or. "I do not see that I can make myself secure except by shutting myself up in an iron box, and in that condition I think I could hardly satisfactorily transact the business of the presidency." Again he said: "If I am killed, I can die but once: but to live in constant dread of it, is to die over and over again." This was an obvious reflection, easy enough of suggestion for any one who was not within the danger line; but to live every day in accordance with it, when the danger was never absent, called for a singular tranquility of temperament, and a kind of courage in which brave men are notoriously apt to be deficient.

On April 9 the President was coming up the Rotomac in a steamer from City Point; the Comte de Chambrun was of the party and relates that, as they were nearing Washington, Mrs.

Lincoln, who had been silently gazing toward the town, said: "That city is filled with our enemies;" whereupon Mr. Lincoln, somewhat impatiently retorted: "Enemies, we must never speak of that!" For he was resolutely cherishing the impossible idea that Northerners and Southerners were to be enemies no longer, but that a pacification of the spirit was coming throughout the warring land contemporaneously with the cessation of hostilities,—a dreaw romantic and hopelessly incapable of realization, but humane and beautiful. Since he did not live to endeavor to transform it into a fact, and thereby perhaps to have his efforts cause even seriously injurious results, it is open to us to forget the impracticability of the fancy and to revere the nature which in such an hour could give birth to such a purpose.

The fourteenth day of April was Friday, Good Friday. Many religious persons afterward ventured to say that if the President had not been at the theater upon that sacred day, the awful tragedy might never have occurred at all. Others, however, not less religiously disposed, were impressed by the coincidence that the fatal shot was fired upon that day which the Christian world had agreed to adopt as the anniversary of the crucifiion of the Savious of mankind. General Grant and his wife were in Washington on that day and the President invited them to go with him to see the play at Ford's theater in the evening, but personal engagements called them northward. In the afternoon the Presi-Int drove out with his wife and again the superstitious element comes in: for he appeared in such good spirits, as he chatted cheerfully of the past and the future, that she uneasily remarked to him: "I have seen you thus only once before; it was just before our dear Willie died." Such a frame of mind, however, under the circumstances at that time must be regarded as entirely natural rather than as ominous.

About nine o'clock in the evening the President entered his box at the theater; with him were his wife, Major Rathbone and a lady; the box had been decorated with an American flag, of which the folds swept down to the stage. Unfortunately it had also been tampered with, in preparation for the plans of the conspirators. Between it and the corridor was a small vestibule; and a stout stick of wood had been so arranged that it could in an instant be made to fasten securely, on the inside, the door which opened from the corridor into this vestibule. Also in the door which led from the vestibule into the box itself a hole had been cut, through which the situation of the different persons in the box could be clearly seen. Soon after the party had entered, when th echeering had subsided and the play was going forward, just after ten o'clock ,a man approached through the corridor, pushed his visiting card into the hands of the attendant who sat there. hastily entered the vestibule and closed and fastened the door behind him. A moment later the noise of a pistol snot astounded every one, and instantly a man was seen at the front of the President's box; Major Rathbone sprang to grapple with him, but was severely slashed in the arm and failed to retard his progress; he vaulted over the rail to the stage, but caught his spur in the folds of the flag, so that he did not alight fairly upon his feet; but he instantly recovered himself, and with a visible limp in his gait hastened across the stage; as he went, he turned toward the audience, brandished the bloody dagger with which he had just struck Rathbone, and cried "Sic semper tyrannis!" Some one recognized John Wilkes Booth, an actor of melo-dramatic characters. The door at the back of the theater was held open for him by Edward Spangler, an employe, and in the alley hard by a boy, also employed about the theater, was holding the assassin's horse, saddled and bridled. Booth kicked the boy aside, with a curse, climbed into the saddle with difficulty,-for the small bone of his leg between the knee and ankle had been broken in his fall upon the stage,—and rode rapidly away into th night. Amid the confusion, no efficient pursuit was made.

FACTS ABOUT

THE LINGOLN MEDIGINES.

磨磨磨磨

We beg to call the attention of the public to the complete line of the Lincoln Medicines. The proprietors have spared no expense to make these remedies the best of their kind on the market. All of the ingredients contained in the Lincoln Medicines are the purest and of the finest quality to be had.

The Lincoln Tea Company have observed the advantage of giving to the public even at a great expense, pure medicines which possess merit, at small profit, rather than a cheap medicine with absolutely no merit and big profits. The enormous sale of these medicines and the numerous testimonials for their merit have amply paid the proprietors for giving to the public honest goods. We trust whoever picks up this pamphlet will read the same, and if you have any ailment for which the Lincoln Medicines are adapted, you will give them a trial and see the good results of an honest remedy.

The herbs used in the manufacture of Lincoln Tea are collected rom different portions of the Globe. Some are imported from the and of the Pyramid and Mummy; some grow under the sunny skies of Italy; some are gathered on the shores washed by the Baltic Sea. All contribute some specific quality for which they are noted, and when combined and compounded together form a medicine which stays the ravages of disease, restores the weakened system to its normal condition and HEALTH, the AIM, is reached.

Every family should keep constantly on hand some simple, effective remedy, reliably known to produce healthy conditions to the human system.

Thinking people everywhere agree that simplicity is the great desideratum. What then, is the test by which the enquirer may exactly know what fills the above requirements? We answer: I OOK UP THE RECORD OF LINCOLN TEA. Here you will find a medicine which removes causes, and consequently cures disease. Compare, too, its gentle yet thorough working with the former prevalent methods resulting in violent purging and griping, which left the system in such an exhausted condition that frequent relapses were the result. Lincoln Tea is GUARANTEED NOT TO GRIPE.

Lincoln Tea for Stomach, Bowels and Liver.

Regularity can never be successfully established by the use of any drastic medicines—for the reason that the vitality is always lowered by its use below recuperation point. Nature teaches us to husband our energies, not to tear down before we build up. VEGETABLE REMEDIES are confessedly mild in their effects upon the human system and among those LINCOLN TEA stands paramount. Deceit is impossible, for each one sees for himself. No man, woman or child need misunderstand conditions or their care.

LINCOLN TEA is one of the grandest and most perfect Blood Purifiers in the world.

Dyspepsia and Stomach Trouble.

SYMPTOMS.—Bad taste in the mouth, furred tongue, offensive breath, belching of wind, distress before or after eating, faint-dizziness, palpitation of the heart, headache, heartburn, ed vision, colic, imperfect circulation, the mind becomes ted, low spirits, fretfulness and irritability follow and insanity results.

LINCOLN TEA cures all forms of stomach trouble and indiion. It invigorates, soothes and heals stomachs where the ag has been impaired by physic and strong drugs.

Over half of the suicides in this country can be traced to a sordered liver. In fact, there is no other disease that has such depressing effect on the patient as disease of the liver. Thounds of people are to-day doctoring for some imaginary ailment, tho, if their livers were working in a healthy manner, would be in erfect health. The liver acts as a purifier of the blood, and bove all other members of the body, should be attended to carciully.

SYMPTOMS.—Yellowish hue of the eyes and cheeks, a frequent rising of a bitter substance, leaving a bad taste in the mouth, a dull, heavy headache, coated tongue, highly colored urine, wind in the stomach, pain and soreness in the right side under the lower ribs, sick headache, dull spirits and restless nights.

LINCOLN TEA is a guaranteed cure for all diseases of the liver. It acts in mediately and leaves none of the bad effects that result from calomel and other poisonous drugs.

Granulated Lids, no matter of how long standing, cured in a few days. Aged persons, who are troubled with watery eyes, and dim or indistinct vision, will find this a never-failing cure. A scientific remedy which cures quickly the worst cases, with but little or no pain. Hundreds have been cured and their eyesight restored by the use of this great remedy. This remedy has cured persons after paying out hundreds of dollars to the doctors and getting no relief.

There are few diseases to which mankind is subject more distressing than sore eyes, and none, perhaps, for which more remedies have been used without success. THE LINCOLN EYE CURE having for many years proved its superior efficacy in numerous tinate cases of long standing in all parts of the country, of ich we have ample testimonials, we are emboldened to say that, safety and efficiency it has never been equaled in removing hthalmia or inflammation of the eyes, at the commencement, and curing sore eyes from a defluxion of the sharp humors.

In all common complaints of the eyes, it will be found a speedy and effectual cure. This celebrated collyrium is made of materials ary different from those commonly used for sore eyes. The prorietors are so sanguine that it will cure in every instance where is applied according to the directions, that they hesitate not to authorize their agents to refund the money in every case where the Eye Cure does not perform what they promise.

IF YOU ARE A SUFFERER FROM ANY FORM OF SORE EYES, DON'T FAIL TO TRY A BOTTLE OF THE FAMOUS LINCOLN EYE CURE, AND BE CONVINCED OF THE WON-DERFUL MERIT THAT IT POSSESSES.

SPRING MEDICINES.

In the spring everybody needs, and should take, a spring medicine. Not only is this a common practice, but a very necessary and healthful one. It is a fact, which physicians acknowledge and the people recognize generally, that a spring tonic taken during the months of March, April and May is more conducive to the restoration of health, in cases of those who are sick, than any other course of treatment that could possibly be adopted.

It is further understood by everybody that even for those who call themselves well, it is very important at this season of the year, if they would maintain good health and vigor, to take a spring remedy to strengthen and invigorate the nerves, tone up the action of all the organs, and thus, by creating a healthy condition of the nerves, blood, stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, as sist Nature in the efforts she always makes in the spring to cleanse, purify and invigorate the system.

In the spring there are a great many and important changes going on in the body. Perfect health can not be maintained while the system is clogged and the organs sluggish, and the person has a languid and weakened feeling, with more or less nervousness and debility.

The Spring Medicine should be some mild, stimulating Remedy known to possess qualities of medicinal character and not a vile, nauseating mixture, of which you know nothing, but a simple, honest preparation. Herb Remedies are acknowledged to be the best for such cases, and of these none is equal to LINCOLN TEA.

It is mild, pleasant and effective, and is recommended by Druggists, Physicians and People everywhere,

No remedy in the world is so sure to bring back bloom and color into the wan and faded cheeks, the brilliancy to the hollow and haggard eyes, the lightness and elasticity to the weak and weary steps, the strength and vitality to the unstrung, shattered and worn out nerves. It is, indeed, the greatest of all spring medicines, for it makes those who use it well and strong.

Beauty lies less in the features than in the condition and expression of the face. The Creator has endowed every woman with beauty, and every woman in good health, who is of a cheerful nature, is beautiful and comely to look upon. A clear, fresh, wholesome look is the result of the possession of good health and no woman can be beautiful and attractive without good health. The dull, dead, gnawing pain, the sense of nervousness, weakness, oppression and discouragement, the tired, listless, languid feeling, the shooting pains, the aching head, pain in the back, all these are symptoms of a disordered system, and all these are beauty killers, producers of dull, leaden complexions, unnatural flushings, dark circles under the eyes, black-heads, lusterless eyes and other disfigurements which divest women of their natural gift of beauty. Why be homely when you can be beautiful and attractive? Get good health, and with it those looks and attributes which attract, please and fascinate. It is within your power to do so, for it is within every woman's power to be well and strong, and hence look her best, if she will use LINCOLN TEA to give her strong, vigorous nerves, pure, rich blood, a clear complexion, and thus restore the energies and vitality of sound and perfect health.

A deranged stomach cannot digest food properly. Undigested food sours or rots in the stomach. That plays havor with the whole of nature's plan of sustaining life. Gas generates and swells the stomach to large proportions. The nervous system becomes excited. The heart gallops and palpitates. The liver is overloaded with corrupt matter; the bowels are unable to dispose of it fast enough, and the blood is corrupted. What is to be done? Simp y assist the stomach, liver and bowels with that greatest of all regulators—LINCOLN TEA. It unloads the bowels, stimulates the liver and invigorates the stomach. Nature does the rest.

Constipation of the bowels is the result or cause of more ill health and suffering than almost any other complaint. The bowels are to the body what the sewers are to a great city. If the sewer is clogged, the deadly gas permeates every house, and scatters the seeds of all diseases throughout the city. Constipated bowels sow the seeds of dyspepsia, liver complaint, impure blood, piles, irregular and painful menstruation and many other derangements from which women suffer. LINCOLN TEA relieves constipation at once, regulates digestion, invigorates the liver, and, by persistent use, makes a permanent cure.

Fill a glass or dish with urine and let it stand twenty-four hours. If it stains the glass, or deposits a sediment, there is trouble for you unless you have treatment. You may not have kidney disease, but you have some derangement of the kidneys, liver, stomach or bowels. LINCOLN TEA has cured hundreds of cases of so-called Bright's disease, simply by regulating the digestion, unloading the bowels and stimulating the liver.
